was terribly straitened bow she should clothe and feed the poor desolates under her charge, and feed the poor desolates under her charge, and towards the last the need grew terribly urgent. She had contracted for a supply of flour at a stipulated price with a soulless sharper, who, finding he could get a higher price on arrival, sold the Sister's flour and pocketed the proceeds. Sister Blanche, almost in despair; made another effort lo get food for her little ones, but was decidedly, almost rudely, repulsed, the party applied to most in despair, made another effort to get five years afterward, they saw each other almost rudely, repulsed, the party applied to "bolding for the Government." Lewis D.

CLARKESVILLE, December 25, 1875. Editors Dispatch: On the night of the 24th a suspicious-looking character stopped at our botel. He wore a blue frock coat, and had dark hair and full red beard. He came on the street on the 25th with a black enamelled bag. He had his whiskers shaved off, from Georgia. He desired to see the leaving the mustache and a small patch on land illustrated by the martyrdom of Hayne, leaving the mustache and a small patch on his chin. He bought a bottle of hair-dye and colored the mustache and goatee. He had a quantity of silver coin, which he traded off dollar for greenbacks. He said his name was Stokes, and that he was raised in this county; but no person knew him here. He left on the evening of kentucky.

A Suggestion.-Let every housekeeper in the city provide himself with a double-barrel shot-gun, loaded with large shot. Then. if a burglar enters the house he can be easily bagged. If young Wollard or the grocer on Eighth street had been thus provided the robber in each case might have been secured. The gun need not be a costly onetsay twelve or fifteen dollars-and it will be worth in such emergency more than a dozen air already in the room; the fresh suppistols, which cost as much as the guns. · SAFETY.

The Night a Wyoming Man Spent with a Mountain Lion.

The Cheyenne News has an account of how Nathan Williams, near Fort Laramie, got away from a mountain lion. Mr. Wil liams resides on a ranch near the fort, and recently, while in the mountains after firewood, sat down on a clump of bushes to adjust his over-shoes. Hearing the bushes crackle behind, he looked around to see who was disturbing his meditations, and was somewhat surprised, if not startled, to look into the eyes of a mountain lion. Mr. Williams was quite vexed that the lion should intrude upon him in this unceremonious manner, and therefore slapped him across the face with his over-shoes, whereupon the lion ran away and Mr. Williams didn't follow him. Mr. Williams lives in a house with one room, the only occupant besides himself being a bired German. That night he was suddenly awakened by the lion jumping in through the window, delib-erately walking across the room, and very composedly laying himself down by the fire-place. Mr. Williams doesn't keep a hotel, therefore wished that his guest had less cheek, and had remained out of the house until invited in. The broken sash and winhis mind, and it was a matter of doubt, how, if ever, he'd get his pay for that. He lay in his cot for a long time, cogitating in his mind how to manage. His rifle was within reach, and once he became so angry that he acceptance. once he became so angry that he cocked it and prepared to shoot, but just then he thought what a mean advantage he would be taking of the lion, who was enjoying the hospitalities of the house, even though unbidden. Besides, he was afraid that he would only wound the animal, when the latter might take the little joke as an insult and inflict punishment. Therefore he decided not to shoot, but remained quiet, not forgetting, however, to keep his rifle in his hands and ready cocked. It was a bright moonlight night, and no curtain, not aven glass, intervened to render the cabin dark and dim. The big logs in the fire place cast a comfortable glow over the room, and, as the tion was stretched out at full length enjoying the warmth, the picture was a beautiful one, though Mr. Williams did not enjoy it. The phlegmatic German was sporing away like the base notes on a trombone, entirely indifferent and oblivious to these matters of interest. The night seemed to be a long one. It appeared to the owner of the cabin as though some modern Joshus had been along and stopped the moon. He grew tired of waiting, though, singular as it may appear, he did not grow sleepy. It was his usual cus-tom to get up first in the merning, but on this occasion he concluded to let the German do the morning chores, thinking, and breakfast with them, in which case he was willing that his hired man should do the honors of the table. The lion scarcely changed his position, and his purring sounded to Mr. Williams like thunder. Daylight at length began to light up the country, and Hans crawled out of his bed, gathered his pants in his hands, and started for the are-place to dress by its warmth, Just as he raised his right leg to thrust it down into his pants his gaze rested upon the liou. For about helf a minute he didn't gry anything, but his eyes buiged out like a sestable. DWELLING No. 318 south Ell Third street, now occupied by T. L. It lifted the coof from the cabin. It lifted the cabin is the cabin to the bo with a howl of fright sprung and of the window, Mr. Williams giring him a parting salute as he went out. The state of their appetites and the high prices of food rendered it necessary that they should economics; therefore they are a light breakfast. The repeat ended, they went out to look for their night's guest. The snow on the ground was marked wife blood, and they had no difficulty in tracing him. In a short time he was overtaken; whereupon each opened site, and the lion "shed out his life awently there," He was a monster in size, weighing six hundred and seventeen pounds.

MORION TAULISM An Evrence of Luxberality.—I find that what is uslied great and powerful life—the administration of large affairs, in commerce, in the courts, in the State—is prone to develop partial and appeals allent. but unless velop parrow and special talent; but, unless combined with a certain cotemplative turn, a taste for abstract truth, for the moral laws, does not build up faith or wan to content.
There is a profound melancholy at the base Recessors, December 28, 1875.

Messrs, Editors,—So much of "the evil that (ev ii) men do lives after them "that the good which good men do descrives to be perturated, if for no better reason than that the influence of example may not all be lost. Let me, now that the good man is gone, put on its first record one of the noble charities of the honored citizen whom so many followed this morning with tears and respect to his this morning with tears and respect to his of them, at a later period, gave to a friend this anecdote: He said that when beenfered this anecdote: He said that when beenfered the Senate he became in a short time intisuperioress of St Joseph's Orphan Asylum, mate with one of his colleagues, and though was terribly straitened bow she should clothe attentive; enough a to the coutine of public duty, they daily returned to each other and > nothing but shook hands long and cordially.

> At last his friend said, "Any light, Albert?".
> "None!" replied Albert. "Any light, Lewis?" "None," replied be. are ri-marons They looked into each other's eyes silently, gave one more last shake each to the hand he held, and thus parted for the last time. Now, should say that the impulse which drew these minds to this inquiry through so many years was better affirmative evidence than their failure to find a confirmation was negative .- R. W. Emerson's new book.

PENDLETON ON PLYMOUTH ROCK.—At the New England Society's dinner in Charleston, S. C., on the 32d instant, Hon. George H. Pendleton said that he had always admired the sturdy virtues of the Pilgrims, and he thought that not the least of those virtues was the fidelity with which they observed their festive occasions. He told them of his first visit to Plymouth Rock. He had always fancied that it was in a rock-bound and inhospitable portion of a bleak and barrent coast. But when he first beheld the famous rock he was disappointed; he found it but a moderate-sized boulder in the middle of the quiet little town of Plymouth. Then had be learned, for the first time, that it was called Plymouth Rock only because there was no other rock in the neighborhood. On his way back to Boston be had wondered at its fame, and had come to the conclusion that it was owing to the fact that all the poets, statesmen, and historians of New England had combined their efforts to make the word the embodiment of all that rendered their people great. And so it was that four fifths of the American people had come to regard Plymouth Rock as something beside which the Stone Mountain of Georgia and the Pallisades of the Hudson were mere pebbles. Mr. Pendleton said that his presence at the dinner was accidental: Having a few days, leisure, he had ceipt of the prices annexed, which are the pubtaken the opportunity to come over lishers' lowest rates. The EDUCATIONAL JOURwere gathered together. He thought that

COMMON-SENSE VENTILATION .- The best practical statement I have met with about ventilation was contained in the remark of a mining engineer; "Air is like a rope; you can pull it better than you can push it." All mechanical appliances for pushing air into a room or a house are disappointing. What we need to do is to pull out the vitiated ply will take care of itself if means for its admission are provided. It has been usual to withdraw the air through openings near the ceiling-that is, to carry off the warmer and therefore lighter portions, leaving the colder strata at the bottom of the room, with their gradual accumulation of cooled carbonic seld undisturbed. Much the better plan would be to draw this lower air out from a point near the floor, allowing the upper and warmer portions to descend and take its place. An open fire, with a large chimney throat, is the best ventilator for any room. The one balf or two thirds of the heat carried up the chimney is the price paid for immunity from disease; and large though this seems, from its daily. draft on the wood-pile or coal-bin, it is tri-fling when compared with dectors' bills and with the loss of strength and efficiency that invariably result from living in unventilated apartments.
